Here are some fantastic destinations to consider when it comes to planning a fabulous gay honeymoon.

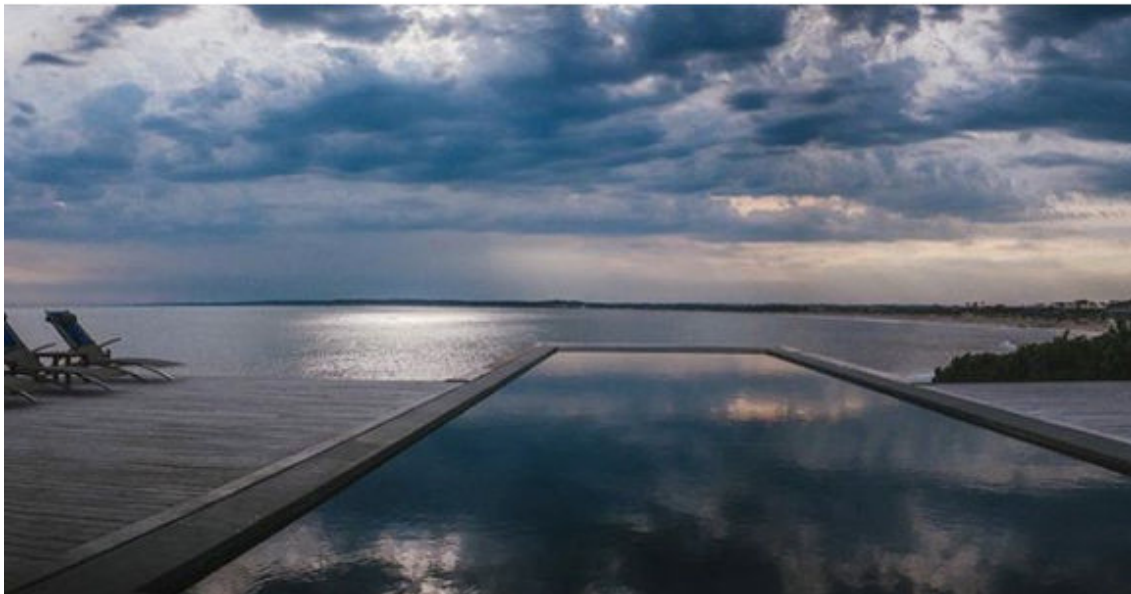

The world is changing for LGBT couples, and that means that travel is changing too. Social attitudes across the globe are becoming more and more accepting, and governments are starting to catch up with the legalization of same-sex marriage. LGBT travelers from the U.S. alone bring about $100 billion to the table—so when it comes to honeymoon planning, that means that same-sex couples have serious spending power. Maybe it's a coincidence that June is both International Pride Month as well as an extremely popular month to get married, but maybe it's not. Either way, here are some fantastic destinations for same-sex couples to consider when it comes to planning an amazing and romantic honeymoon, from wine countries to tropical paradises.

vikretreats We love starting our week off with an amazing review! #vikvibe "From the moment we rolled up (at Playa Vik), we were spoiled with a warm welcome from our experience concierge, Sebastian. He gave us the obligatory room and hotel overview and then handed us a suggested itinerary of activities that we could tweak to our liking....The food, service, and views are incredible...Sabrina, the hotel GM, checked in with us on the last day and was able to accommodate some last minute needs. You can tell the focus on the guest comes from her strong and friendly leadership....Matias, filled in for Sebastian on the last day, and I could tell that both experience concierges had shared notes about our likes and dislikes. Incredible attention to detail. Even our lunch at La Susana in Bahia Vik felt like a perfectly choreographed handoff without feeling forced. Visiting Playa Vik during Semana Santa, at the end of high season, gave us an opportunity to enjoy the restaurants and lifestyle without the masses. A joyful stroke of luck for us...Playa caters to your every wish and we plan to come back often!" PC: La Celebración

The “South American Riviera” is a surprisingly chic, surprisingly European-feeling destination, so it should come as no surprise that it is often called the most LGBT-friendly country in the region. Don’t worry about skipping the capital city of Montevideo, because the best thing to do is rent a car from the airport and head directly up the coastline. Cruise right past the touristy, overdeveloped Punta del Este and drive along the coast through La Barra to the luxe-bohemian enclave at José Ignacio. Stay at Playa Vik and soak up some sunshine before grabbing dinner at the world-famous La Huella. Continue your journey just a few miles inland with a stay at Estancia Vik, where you can get your inner gaucho on and spend all day riding horses on the hotel’s sweeping property. Don’t leave the region without stopping for lunch at Garzón, a former ghost town which Argentinian celebrity chef Francis Mallmann brought back to life with his restaurant by the same name. It might sound like a lot of bouncing around for one honeymoon, but trust us—after just a few days you will have seen much of this tiny country, and will have more than enough shared memories to show for it.
